You're listening to Snippets from the Summit with your host, Scot McKay.

All right, how's it going, gentlemen? This is your main man, Scot McKay, coming at you again with another Snippet from the Summit as part of The Mountain Top Podcast from X & Y Communications. Let's have a little bit of fun today. Let's talk about what I'm hearing referred to as analog resistance. Now, you know, that sounds like an electrical term that, you know, technicians and scientists may throw around, but it actually refers to something much different in the popular vernacular nowadays.

And I think a warrant's being talked about, especially relative to improving our skills and our success with women. Now, I'm especially going to talk to you guys who are over 30, maybe even over 40 or 50 or 60, who want to date younger women. A lot of us are thinking, okay, in order to date younger women, we're going to have to be hip with the culture. We're going to have to be.

Up to date with things, we can't be a dinosaur out there if we're saying a 38-year-old guy wanting to date 24 or 25-year-old women. But here's the thing. Even as our lives have been pretty much dominated by electronics for decades now and by smartphones for well over 15 years now, and the future seems to be hurtling at light speed towards AI, the rebellion against all of that digitization.

And the automation of virtually everything is indeed coming from young people, say your Gen Zs, as much as it's coming from anybody else. People are very suspect that they're being watched, that they're being spied on. They're not talking about cars that can turn themselves off, you know, if you're accused by Big Brother of some sort of violation. And there's a massive backlash by a whole lot of young people.

against all of this artificial intelligence. So what does this mean in the context we're speaking of today? Well, for years I've talked about how if you want to be an older guy who attracts younger women, it's not about acting younger. It's indeed about leveraging your wisdom, your decision-making ability, your ability to make women feel safe and comfortable that a lot of younger guys are still missing out on that causes younger women to be attracted to you.

Reminded of the time that there was a guy in his fifties who was wearing a varsity jacket that looked like something a high schooler would wear with an Ed Hardy shirt underneath it. This was years ago, thinking he was gonna go get 20-year-old girls. Well, obviously that was sort of creepy and it was backfiring on him spectacularly. But I think on the other side of the coin, a lot of guys are thinking, well, you know what, I also don't want to look like I'm old and out of touch, like the aforementioned dinosaur persona, right?

Well, nowadays, like we've talked about in terms of going out and meeting women in real life, as opposed to say using online dating and apps, old school really is the new school. I saw a report online that said over sixty percent of Gen Z folks surveyed would rather have an older car with more analog features than have one of the new cars with all the advanced features. Now, my wife drives one of those aforementioned new cars.

And it drives me nuts. I mean, it is nagging you with safety features. And wake up, there's a car ahead of you. It's like, well, you know, you have a firm grasp on the obvious. It's really super annoying, and in many ways, not only feels like the car is actually imposing upon you, but it just feels overcomplicated. Like it's just too much. Too much to deal with, too much to process, and definitely too much to go wrong and have to fix. Now

I'm not alone in longing for the days of manual transmissions, you know, driving a stick shift. Just recently I heard that the term automatic will stop referring to transmissions in just a short amount of time from now and start referring to cars that drive themselves, you know, like Teslas already do. But meanwhile, even young adults, even high school kids aren't trusting this. They know better.

They sense that their humanity is being cut off from reality by all of this electronic quote unquote advancement, and they're at least curious about what the analog world is like. You may have commented to your friends, like I have with mine, that it's really fun to watch movies set in the 50s and 60s and even the 70s and 80s, and think to yourself, man, it must have been a lot of fun to be alive and be social then. Well

You're not wrong if you think that. It was a lot of fun. I'm a child of the 70s and 80s myself, and there's a lot about that time that was indeed a lot simpler, less complicated. More men were men, more women were women, and it was pretty great. So what do you do about all this? Well, first of all, if you drive a used car, and I'm raising my hand, a lot of you guys don't know this, but I happily drive an 18-year-old pickup truck.

In many ways because it doesn't have all the bells and whistles. It's in my opinion, it's the best looking F one hundred fifty compared to anything that's been made since, but also because it has the options I want and none of the ones I never asked for. I think you could pretty much sum up today's technology by saying that it is indeed a whole lot of things nobody ever realized they needed and never asked for. So if you drive an older car and you keep it safe and you keep it in good order.

working order and and let's keep it real in good visual order as well. Women may actually think your car is just as cool as something new that you bought. And while we're at it, let's talk about a couple other analog features that may cause you to appear and seem cool to women. How about wearing a nice watch? A lot of people nowadays are just skipping the whole watch routine to begin with because they already have a smartphone to tell them the time. Wear the watch.

What about wearing nice clothes? A lot of people are pretty much slumming it nowadays. It's actually old school to look good. And yes, we've talked about meeting women out there in real life, approaching them without fear, showing respect for women, and actually being masculine in the way you were designed to be masculine without any fear-based reticence or backlash against what the media has been telling you about your masculinity.

Scot McKay (06:46.754)

Gentlemen, yes, you can be old school without being a dinosaur because even the younger women you're attracted to and want to go out with are feeling this analog resistance. And if you represent it in a cool way, you may very well reap massive benefits in your social life. And by the way, let's talk about the word dating. Talk about old school and analog. Gentlemen, you would not believe the number of younger women who haven't been taken on a proper date in perhaps years and they're craving it. Stand up and be that guy. Enthusiastically participate in the analog resistance out there with women in the best way possible and let me know how it goes for you.
