From the mist and shrouded mountaintop fortress that is x&y Communications Headquarters. You're listening to the World famous mountaintop podcast. And now, your host Scot McKay.

Scot McKay 00:18

All right Greetings, gentlemen, and welcome yet again to another episode of the world famous mountaintop podcast. My name is Scot McKay at Scot McKay on Twitter and parlour. Real Scot McKay on Instagram, Scot McKay on YouTube, you can join our Facebook group of like minded men who want to make something of their lives and get the greatest woman in their life to share all that with. At the mountain top summit on Facebook, our URL for all things mountaintop podcast is as always mountain top podcast calm with me today, as a new friend of mine, I'm really excited about this show, because this is one of my favorite topics. And we've kind of talked about it under the radar or maybe indirectly around here several times, especially when we have female guests. But today, we're gonna throw it all out on the table. Her name is Karen Turk. She's a conservative commentator, which makes her a conservative lady. And she is the host and the author of Behind the Headlines, the radio show and Behind the Headlines the book respectively. And today we're going to talk about why conservative women rock. Karen, welcome to the show.

Karyn Turk 01:27

Ah, thank you so great to be here. Conservative women do rock I love conservative women.

Scot McKay 01:32

Yeah, well, you're a biased opinion, of course, as in my

Karyn Turk 01:35

true true, you know, I think conservative women are hotter than liberal women.

Scot McKay 01:40

Well, I think that's a great place to start, except what I'm going to do is I'm going to issue a little disclaimer up front. Guys who are new to this show, this is not a political show, I don't blatantly put politics front and center on this show. I don't talk about who I vote for etc, etc. However, I am an independent thinking kind of guy, I will draw the truth from the entire political spectrum. And we've talked about that someone we've had other free thinkers on this show like Brian sharp, aka hotep, Jesus comes to mind. And we thought of the guys like that too. But typically, what happens is when we think freely, and we really look inside the issues and really don't want to be sheeple, especially for people who take ownership over our own responsibility, and aren't blamers and aren't victim mindset kind of guys, oftentimes to start sounding like a conservative show. So these guys know where I stand. And so Karen, I've already told you that I agree with the basic premise that conservative women rock. I've mostly dated conservative women my entire life, I am married to a woman who I would call a Trump supporter. If you guys don't know that about Emily, she likes Donald Trump more than I do. Let's just put it that way, in every respect, but even personally, but to get back to the excellent and well founded point that you just made, I would agree with you that conservative women are hotter. And I'll let you riff on that a little bit. What does that mean to you? And how did you arrive at that conclusion?

Karyn Turk 03:17

Well, you know, I think that it's a pretty easy conclusion to get at, because just like you were talking about not having a victim mentality, you're talking about women that are on let's call it the right side of the aisle, just to keep things simple. Your wife being one of them, if she's a Trump supporter, you know, we don't have a victim mentality. All of the women that I know that occupy the same space as me, are, you know, women who are self motivated, who don't play the victim, who are willing to stand up for what's right, who believe in hood to gender society, where men have certain great qualities, and women have certain great qualities. And together, it's what makes the world Great. So I think when you look at the conservative women that I know, we just tend to be stronger women who don't take a victim like stance and let's face it, a victim like stance isn't attractive for men, especially and women either. It's just weakness. And, you know, when you talk about your wife liking Donald Trump on a personal level, as well as you know, a political level, I tend to agree with her and a lot of women that I know do too, because we admire the strength that Donald Trump has. And when you talk about conservative women, we also mirror strength.

Scot McKay 04:36

Now see, when you talk to a lot of people in mainstream society, they would take terms like strength, mental toughness, power, and automatically with kind of a knee jerk response assign those traits to masculinity. But what you just said is you also believe in two genders you believe in you believe in male and female, which would point to a strong belief that women Are women men are men, and that the masculine represents the male side of the equation and female expresses the feminine side of the equation, which says to me by proxy that you believe like I do, by the way, I'm gonna go ahead and not be coy about that I'm gonna make it known to you that confidence, mental toughness, personal power, those things aren't masculine or feminine. They're human virtues. And then the masculinity and femininity get layered on top of that. And that's how we sexually attract each other. Hence, these women who you're speaking of these conservative women, who aren't victims who don't have to be mollycoddled, who aren't, God forbid, easily offended, and I want to talk about that. Yeah. And yet, they turn us on because they're all woman all the time. And meanwhile, a man who knows what it means to be a man and isn't a victim himself, you know, and knows how to be mentally tough and confident. Oh, is there any wonder these people get hot for each other? Right?

Karyn Turk 06:00

Right. I've been, you know, accused of having some masculine qualities. And I'm totally cool with that. And I think there are a lot of men that, you know, might not be in touch with their feminine side. But they all have it, you know, some men are more sensitive than others. And those are qualities that we equate to women. But what's wrong with that? Why are we so concerned with all of these labels on and why can't we be a little bit of both?

Scot McKay 06:27

Well, I think when you're talking about those traits, as fortune what happened, I wouldn't expect you to know this. But my wife and I did a show, probably three episodes ago, where we talked about masculine sides and feminine sides. And what it came down to was some of these traits get labeled masculine or feminine when really they're human. Uh huh. For example, men are the logical ones. And women are the emotional ones, according to conventional wisdom, but that's not true. I mean, anybody who's ever been to a football game and seeing these dudes cheer for their team, when they score a touchdown, those men can be plenty emotional. So these human traits, these traits that make us great, solid, virtuous human beings, cause us to like each other. I mean, my term for that is being connectable there are certain immutable traits that we all are looking for. In other words, nobody wants someone who's dishonest and a liar. They want someone who's honest, nobody wants someone who's a black hearted, terrible evil person they want someone to kind hearted wants to do right. People want someone optimistic, not pessimistic and the like. But when you get down to what makes us masculine and feminine, a conservative woman will believe that women and men are the two genders, the two polar opposites, sexually. And that's how they attract each other. And see now the word you used at the beginning of this whole conversation was hot, conservative women are hotter, which sounds like sexual attractiveness to me. So how would you define the ways that conservative women are just hot compared to say, liberal women, and I will go ahead and throw a match on that fire by saying, I would much rather watch any woman who appears on Fox News at night than any woman on CNN or MSNBC just because they're hotter?

Karyn Turk 08:21

Yeah, I agree. And I think, you know, when you look at conservative women, you're talking about women who believe in themselves who are strong that believe in their, you know, their freedom, to have their own opinion, and to be free thinkers. And unlike people that occupy the left, you don't have that freedom. On the left, you have to fall in line, you have to be a sheep, you have to believe what other people tell you, we don't have the same restrictions on the right side of the aisle. And most of the women who, you know, work on Fox News, who I know or, you know, friends of mine, who are Trump supporters, or just, you know, independent, free thinking women who right now are considering themselves republicans because we have a two party system. And that's the way you got to roll. Most of those women are hot, because they're self assured, confident, non victim mentality, women that are willing to be free thinkers and take control of their lives. And that's what makes them hotter. And what goes along with that is that goes along with the way that they end up appearing. It goes along with that outward personal appearance. And we can all say all day long that we don't care about outward appearances. But I'll be very honest,

I do care about it. I want to look good. I want to take pride in how I look. I want other people I want men to turn their heads and say Wow, she's pretty. And there's nothing wrong with that. If I was on the left, and I was to say that out there women would chastise me and say, Oh, well, you're just looking to get attention. You know, there's something wrong with you. You know, it doesn't matter how you look and that's not reality. It doesn't matter how you look how you look as a reflection of how you feel inside. So anybody who wants to say that that's shallow can go right ahead. It's not it's reality. And that's why I think conservative women are hotter because we're in touch with that. And we admit it.

Scot McKay 10:17

Well, anytime someone's coming at you with the blame game, or I'm a victim, and you're somehow able to do things I'm not and that's not fair. And someone did this to me. That's inherently unattractive. And I'll tell you something, Karen, I have a new hashtag that I'm using frequently called hashtag, easily offended people suck.

10:41

I like it.

Scot McKay 10:42

It's true. I mean, there's nothing more tedious than dealing with someone who's just who just hates all sorts of things. And they're looking to blame somebody else. And it's everybody else's fault. And they're looking for the negative and everything. And a lot of women are like that, you know, and a lot of men are like that, too. Let's be real.

Karyn Turk 11:01

I think it's more I think you made a very good point. I do think it's more prevalent in the female population than it is in the male population. But there are men and, you know, I think men tend to cover up those inadequacies publicly a little bit more than women do, where women will wear it on their sleeve, and they'll use it for sympathy. And that's one thing that just turns my stomach entirely. I can't, I cannot I don't get it. You know, I get along. I gotta tell you, I, the majority of my friends are either really strong conservative women or men, I have a lot of male friends. And I think that's because I have a zero tolerance policy for that feeling bad for you. I don't feel bad for you. Do I want to help you if you need my help? As a friend, if you came to me and said, Hey, Karen, I need your help with something Of course, I would help you out. But when it comes from that, Oh, poor me. Poor me. Nothing ever goes right for me. Nobody wants to be around like somebody like that. And, yeah, there are a lot of women who wear that on their sleeve and use it for sympathy from both sexes. And there's a camaraderie that goes along with that. I can tell you living in South Florida. You know, I have a lot of friends in Palm Beach. I have a lot of friends in Boca. And there's this, you know, population of women who you know, are divorcees who take pride a lot of pride in being the victim. And it's a complete turnoff for me as a female friend, and I'm sure it's a complete turnoff for men right and left. And that's I probably inherently why they're single. Oh, I would agree 1,000%. With that, meanwhile, you have apps like OK, Cupid, who are trying to brainwash their customer base, or potential customer base into thinking, if you're a Trump supporter, you're going to die alone, like you're on dateable. And meanwhile, I'm thinking, Oh, boy, that's the most ironic mindset I've ever seen in my entire life, because of exactly what you're saying. It's just not an attractive trait to be a victim. And I don't know, I think there's a sizable compliment of men out there who are perfectly okay with acting like a little bitch, even though it's going to get them nowhere in life. But yeah, you know, you said it not me a lot more women, I think, are this have this negative victim vibe? And I'll tell you, here's the punch line, okay. 95% of those women are liberal, not conservative.

Karyn Turk 13:27

100% of them are liberal, not conservative. Very nice, right there. Because they are absolutely, just that it permeates that culture. It's a part of the culture. And unfortunately, you know, I know I hate to make it political, but it's the way that it's divided. It's the way that it is it's reality. And I can spot you know, a left leaning woman who's immediately, not not only not going to agree with me, but won't even give me the time of day to listen to my argument or debate with me, because they can't stand being challenged, because they're always the victim. It's what you're doing to them. And unfortunately, you know, they're the ones who are unhappy because of it. And, you know, I want to wake up every day and be positive and happy. You made a really good point and saying, you know, everybody wants an optimist, not a pessimist. You know, I take a lot of pride in putting myself in an optimistic frame of mind, even when you know, I might wake up in the morning and I'm not feeling entirely optimistic. I forced myself to be optimistic, because that's the only way I want to live. I want to be happy. I want to look good. I want to put makeup on my face. I want to get dressed up, you know, I want to have those female qualities and I want to do that for myself to make myself feel good. But yeah, I also want to do it because I want other people to accept me Listen to me and want to be around.

Scot McKay 14:52

Well, conservative women, women who are glad to be women, women who embrace the idea of empowered femininity. Absolutely, We'll rise up to that on a daily basis. You know, you're not wish you were born something else, you don't get angry at the other gender for something they have and something you don't. I've noticed that conservative women take great pride in being women and understand the power of that femininity. Meanwhile, a liberal woman is much more likely to have an axe to grind with men in general. And, of course, when one has a victim mentality, it's got to be someone else's fault. So if you're a female human being, whose fault does it have to be that all this bad stuff happened to you? Or that they got something you didn't? It has to be the men's fault. And I'll tell you something, Karen, I don't understand how anybody can have a happy relationship with a woman when her entire mindset is grounded in I don't like men writ large, let alone you in particular.

Karyn Turk 15:50

No. And that's why a lot of these women are divorced and unhappy and can't find themselves in another relationship or won't even pursue a relationship because that's the way that they're choosing to live, you know, could they change their mindset? Maybe, maybe not. But you know, it just goes into that whole victim mentality. And I can assure you that if I was born a man, I would probably be the biggest flaming drag queen on the planet. Because I believe in feminine power, and I love my femininity. And I also think that when feminism started, and we're feminism is now that something has gotten largely twisted in the narrative, because I think if we went back in time, and we talked to the women at the beginning of the feminist movement, they were not victims. They were women who stood up and took control, who said, You know what, we're equal. We want our rights. We want to fight for this. These weren't victims. These aren't the leftists of today, but yet the left has embraced it. They are the feminists. And that's the most ludicrous thing I've ever heard. It's absolutely hypocrisy, but it goes along with the hypocrisy that seems to permeate that side of the aisle. And unfortunately, you know, again, I don't want to make it a divisive thing, but we're living in a divided world.

Scot McKay 17:07

What comes to mind is the recent vice presidential debate, where Mike Pence, in my opinion, couldn't have been more of a gentleman, especially compared to Donald Trump, of course, who has this unique ability to be trumpian. And when other people try to match up with them, they just end up looking like, you know, douchebags. Yeah. The day after the press was he was mansplaining, poor Kamla Harris. And Kamala Harris was such a victim for having to put up with this guy, wait a minute, wait, what this woman is gonna be a heartbeat away from the presidency, she's gonna have to do with the Putin's and the she's and the Kim Jong Un's of the world to go toe to toe with these very smart world leaders who may be adversarial towards the United States, but then she's going to be a victim at the same time. Look, feminism can't espouse female empowerment and female victimhood at the same time and switch roles based on a whim that just doesn't add up. That's a logical fallacy.

K

Karyn Turk 18:07

100% and, you know, her flippin attitude was so evident to most of us, anybody who, you know, is looking at this thing, you know, who isn't just being blind, you know, her attitude was split, that she was just, you know, not as composed, she was not, you know, they accuse the president all the time of not being presidential. But here's this woman who is just acting like outside a baby bitch up on the stage. And that's exactly what that was. And, you know, it was almost like she was having some sort of little emotional temper tantrum. And I don't know how we could even consider someone like that for the seat of vice president. But that's the twisted world that we're living in. And unfortunately, you know, for a lot of us, we see through the fact that Joe Biden isn't even really the real candidate here. If I was to make a prediction, God forbid, if the world like when flipped on its axis and Joe Biden won, I could pretty much guarantee you that they're going to diagnose him with dementia within the first six months, and she's going to be in that presidential seat. That's a very, very scary proposition. But I do believe that Trump has got this election as a landslide, despite the media hype, and despite the false narrative that's out there and the false polls, but you know, all of the radio and mainstream media, you know, not alternative shows like those are my podcasts, but mainstream media, traditional media, traditional television, it's all based on advertising. A large part of that advertising is is you know, George Soros face, all of his revenue base, and they have to make things salacious. They have to get eyeballs and they're desperate. And these fake polls and fake news all come from a culture of desperation.

Scot McKay 19:53

I'll tell you what my banner sponsor so I'm very proud of, I would say none of them are putting ticularly political, but I think they're all sponsoring the correct show, of course virgin main, which is Jocko willings, company, heroes soap, which is making men all over the world smell good and founded by a guy who's a veteran, and he donates some of this money to wounded warriors and key port, which is, you know, post modern techie version of a Swiss Army knife, all that manly stuff. And I know the guys who run it personally, and, you know, they're all in the right place. And so I completely resonate with what you're saying about, you know, taking care of your sponsors, and so forth. But I also think it's kind of the chicken in the egg. This show was here before the sponsors were and you know, we are very listener centric around here. We don't even particularly need sponsors, per se. But it's just kind of nice to have all that line up. What I want to address is this idea of Kamla Harris, being in line to be president and I agree with you 1,000%. I don't think there's anybody in this country who if they're honest with themselves, doesn't believe that if that ticket gets elected, Camila is going to be your first female president sooner than later. And you know, it's interesting back in 2016, when Hillary lost and they held all the voting patterns and demographics up to the light, they were like, oh, man are awful. You know, the patriarchy is alive and well, because men have just proven they still don't want a female president. The battle cry was, well, we're okay with a female president, just not that female president. And, of course, that caused a whole lot of squealing and yelling and outrage on the left. But I'll tell you something. I watched an interview with Candice Owens, the night after Kamala and Mike Pence were all after it. And she was brilliant. She's spelled it out, man. God bless her. She's only 31 years old. She's got to wait till four years from now before she can even be under consideration. But I'd vote for and I honestly, I would much rather have had Tulsi Gabbert up there, then comma, I think she makes much more sense. I think just she got canceled by Hillary. And that's what happened to her. Because Tulsi is pretty cool. Even if she's on the left. I don't agree with all of her politics, but at least she's sensible. And she's a strong feminine woman and she's a leader. There are lots of women who I think could be excellent in politics and who are excellent in politics. I mean, right now, Amy Coney Barrett is getting vetted to be the next Supreme Court Justice she probably will be by the time this show airs. By the way, we'll find out soon enough whether your prediction on Donald Trump's landslide will age well or not.

K

Karyn Turk 22:43

We sure well, and you just mentioned like so many of my favorite people I've met. I've met Candace Owens many times I've spent time with her, you know, at dinner sitting next to her talking to her picking her brain and she is exactly the same person off camera is she is on camera, she's you can tell because how quick she is. She's She's real. Yeah, there's nothing, there's no, there's not one false turn about her. She is exactly who she is. And when you meet her and you spend time with her, you know, in a personal setting, she's exactly that same person. And I'm a huge fan of hers. And when we talk about Amy Coney Barrett, what I think is really very transparent about the left in this country and about the false narratives that are out there. Here we have a woman here we have a woman who has seven children, who's a mother, who is well spoken, who didn't use any notes at all, during these confirmation hearings, who is just an absolute rock star, and yet, they're attacking her and they're attacking her for one reason, and one reason only, because she has conservative values. It is just mind boggling because she represents so much about what the left pretends to embrace. However, you see the transparency, when we have these three days of hearings and the false narratives that are out there. And you say to yourself, this is utter hypocrisy.

Scot McKay 24:12

Well, I would qualify what she said even further. I'm not even so convinced that the 53 to 47 vote which is imminent, is going to be because of her conservative values. But because of Trump. I mean, whatever Trump does, they're not going to do i mean that's the whole thing. But it's amazing. I haven't watched the whole thing, but what I've watched of it has proven she's unflappable. She's absolutely qualified. I mean, she got vetted by the Congress two years ago for her current bench seat. And yet, here's the part I want to run by you because I think it's gonna be a lot of fun to talk about. I watched Cory Booker grill her. Okay, not once that anybody accuse Cory Booker of mansplaining her, so she's right, this whole mansplaining thing has to do with what lever you pull in the booth.

Karyn Turk 24:58

Yeah, it does. And you know, Here's what's mind boggling to me too. And, you know, we're gonna get we kind of went through total political angle here. But, you know, now that we're here, you know, one of the problems that we have is that, you know, it's it's okay for for them not okay for us. It's just this this twisted reality right now, where, you know, there's just, it doesn't even make any sense. It's really very upside down and you look at this and you say to yourself, you know, how do we get past this? What do we do, because it's not even about policy anymore. It's not even about what the democrats or the left brings to the table anymore. It's about I hate Donald Trump, and I don't want to do anything that Donald Trump wants. That's right selection is about either you like Donald Trump, or you hate Donald Trump. That should not be part of our electoral process.

Scot McKay 25:49

All right. Well, let's bring this full circle. All right. Not once that I hear Amy Coney Barrett complain about having been mansplain to Oh, my goodness, I'm just a girl. Why are these people picking on me? You don't have the right to grill me that hard, because I'm different. Because I'm female. Oh, no, she was strong, empowered. And she believes she has all the rights and privileges of any man sitting there. And she also believes she has the personal resilience of any man who would sit there. And that's where I want to go with this conversation next. A lot of times, we as men are accused of potentially being intimidated by a strong woman, a woman with confidence, a woman who's quick on her feet, a woman of high intelligence. And, you know, I'm sure you know this, but lots of women who are very high IQ and very empowered, have a hard time dating because they have a hard time finding a man they can actually respect a man who can be a provider, a protector and a provider and help make the world safe for her femininity to come out and bestowal those wonderful, feminine gifts onto us all. And that's really a shame. Because when a woman is empowered, she is worth so much as a partner in life. What do you have to say about this idea of men being intimidated by a strong, powerful, yes, conservative woman? Especially if she's beautiful, especially if she's sharp? What can we as guys do to ready ourselves better for the right relationship with a woman who's conservative will treat us right, who will respect our masculinity? Who wants to be a woman and wants us to be a man? I bet you got lots of thoughts on that.

Karyn Turk 27:28

I do. I mean, I think if you're in a situation like that, you're in the wrong relationship. And I think a lot of times, I mean, I told you off the record, before we came on the show, you know, I'm on my third marriage, and a third time's a charm with me, I have not made the best relationship decisions, I, you know, have ended up in relationships with people who like my second husband, who I absolutely loved. And he was an amazing person. And we were really good friends. But we we just butt heads all the time, because he didn't want a strong woman, he wanted somebody who was much more passive than I did. And that's something that I have to take personal responsibility for. And I had to take personal responsibility for when we split up, we actually remain to be very good friends, because we both identified the fact that we were in the wrong relationship. My first husband is voting for, you know, Biden, he was a Bernie Sanders supporter, and I met him in high school. And in high school, you know, things didn't seem to matter as much. It didn't really matter that we weren't aligned on politics, it, it didn't seem important to me, but I didn't realize how much that was important to me. So I have to take personal responsibility for that, too. Because if I had been in touch with myself, the way that I should have been, I would have realized that I was in the wrong relationship. So I think sometimes these things are clues that maybe it can't be fixed. Maybe you're just not with the right partner. And you have to identify that that's not the right person, instead of trying to stick a square peg into a round hole.

Scot McKay 28:53

Yeah, hundred percent. I think that's an honest, transparent answer. And as you were speaking, I hark back to when I was in high school, and college, and it was during the Reagan administration. Right now you saying I loved ronald reagan?

Karyn Turk 29:05

Scot McKay 29:07

Yeah. And what's fascinating to me is my friends and I never talked about politics. Politics was the furthest thing from our mind, between age 14 and 22. Yet nowadays, everybody's political, everything is political. You can't choose a brand of beans to buy literally, without it going political, except Goya still flies off the shelf because I live in San Antonio.

Karyn Turk 29:31

Well, we've had a lot of people that have shifted, you know, what I've noticed, too, is that you have a lot of people that you know, they're getting it, I mean, it goes both ways, you know, people to get more conservatives as they get older, and I hope that that's going to be you know, at least two of my children, then at some point, they're going to kind of look at things and they're going to be you know, on their own and they're going to become capitalists and then it's going to translate into them being more conservative. But on the other side of things, you have these people that shift because they feel like they're getting a raw deal in life. And I'll go back to my first husband for a second, because why not? And, you know, when we were together, and when politics wasn't as important to me, you know, it was the Clinton years, he was a Republican. And something changed. You know, I actually voted for ross perot. And I believe he did, too, if I go back in my memory way, way back, but I voted for ross perot, because for the same reasons that I voted for Donald Trump, because I wanted someone to fix the economy. And I felt that if we had somebody who gave us a strong economy, then we would be able to fix a lot of other issues, including social ones. So at the time, that was the right choice for me, and, you know, that was the direction that I took. But I think part of the reason that my first husband is now, you know, a Bernie Sanders supporter, and basically a socialist, I mean, we don't speak and we haven't spoken in about 15 years, and I'm very happy about that, you know, he's his kids, whatever, you know, he lives his life, he's remarried, but there's no reason for us to have a conversation because there's no good that's going to come of it. But it's because he feels like he got a raw deal in life somehow. And then all of a sudden shifted, and he took a victim mentality and became a borderline socialist. And, you know, that's his, that's his mission. Okay, you know, but I can understand that. And I think, as a as a woman, that's a very unattractive quality and a man. And I'm not talking about him, specifically, I'm talking about men in general, once a man takes a stance of being a victim, that that's even more unattractive than a woman being a victim.

I agree. Sometimes when women are victims, we as guys can feel even more like protectors and providers and feel like we're in a position to be more of a hero to her. But I would offer that, that gets old really quickly. And maybe at the beginning, I mean, obviously, if a guy is a victim, and he's helpless, and you know, he lacks confidence, I have what I call the big four, which are confidence, masculinity, as women define it, being a provider protector, presiding, that kind of thing, making women feel safe and comfortable in their presence and being a man of character. I don't think a guy with those four traits can lose when it comes to finding a high quality woman of character, okay, someone who isn't broken. And I'll just leave it there for now. But when a man lacks confidence, when he thinks everything is everybody else's fault, when he's looking for someone to build him up and give him a handout, there's no way in hell, he's going to make a woman even feel physically attracted to him. Because he can't provide he can't protect, he's basically useless to femininity. And that's something that I really try to impress upon these guys on this show. And I think you've just made an excellent case for how women feel that so deeply. So I really appreciate that we're running out of time. Her name is Karen Turk. She's a conservative commentator.
