From the mist and shrouded mountaintop fortress that is x&y Communications Headquarters, you're listening to the world-famous Mountain Top Podcast. And now, here's your host, Scot McKay.

Scot McKay 00:18

Greetings everybody all across the fruited plain. My name is Scot McKay. And I'm Emily make hay, and we want to welcome you to yet another episode of The Big Show. I'll tell you what, Emily today we've got an excellent topic. It's one of those topics that is interesting no matter what, but probably a lot more fun to talk about than to experience firsthand.

Emily McKay 00:40

I don't know, I think it might be a little bit on the strange or weird side.

Scot McKay 00:44

Is that any fun to experience firsthand?

Emily McKay 00:46

Well can be when in hindsight, when you get to tell a story,

Scot McKay 00:49

while we're talking today about creepy behavior you know people who just are creepers while we're talking today, about creepy behavior, you know, people who just are creepers. Okay. And I think that is something that's very off putting, for most people in real life. It's a lot of fun, maybe to talk about after the fact it's one of those things where we might say to ourselves, you know, we're all gonna laugh about this later. But especially women on dates when they encounter someone creepy. It feels threatening, doesn't it?

 Emily McKay 01:15

Oh, no, it's definitely on the scary side, I would say that we have at least all of us have dated at least one person this way. Well, I'm a guy. And I've dated at least one woman who has really creepy more than one actually. So what happens to the best of us? Yeah, I guess guys experience it too, huh? Well, being creepy is not gender specific.

 Scot McKay 01:23

 Emily McKay 01:30

 Scot McKay 01:33

I mean, you may read online about so many horror stories from women in particular, because I think women are probably more freaked out and scared by what happens and need to vent about it. I think guys might just shrug it off. But I don't think being creepy. Is gender specific at all.

 Emily McKay 01:49

True that I would think that most of you guys are more concerned about coming across as creepy. Yeah, I think that's true. I think we've been conditioned to want to avoid looking creepy at all costs. And the funny part about that perhaps the ironic part about all that is I think it's probably guys who are least likely to be creepy, who are most worried about coming off that way. Because obviously, if you're creepy, you either want to be that way, or you completely lack self awareness or something. Right?

 Scot McKay 01:55

 Emily McKay 02:19

Well, true. And I would imagine as women, we're just too perfect to be creepy.

Scot McKay 02:24

No, no, no, we've already established it's not gender specific.

Emily McKay 02:28

Well, I would think most of us think that we cannot be creepy. I mean, I would imagine most women go to a date, thinking that we're going to come across just fine. Well, I think most people in general feel that way. Or they're worried they won't come off the way they want to in an attractive winsome matter. But I think when people are concerned about oh, God, don't be creepy. It's more because they're inside their head too much. It's kind of like the first time I was ever on a big radio show nationwide. I was thinking thoughts like, oh my god, what if I erupt into temporary Tourette syndrome and start dropping F bombs? You know, because I can't help myself. It's just an irrational fear. For most people. You know what I mean?

Scot McKay 02:37

Emily McKay 03:07

Oh, yes. Well, let's talk about what some of these creepy attributes are and make sure that we don't have them

Scot McKay 03:12

after what I just said. Half the audience is going yeah, that's creepy McKay. Are you thinking like, let's define what creepy is to begin with. You're the woman in the room. I hope last I checked. And I want to hear your definition of creepy before I give mine

Emily McKay 03:29

Well, for me creepy would be anything outside the norm something that would make me feel unsafe, like you're going to somehow hunt me, stalk me and rape me.

Scot McKay 03:40

Yeah, I agree with you in terms of any behavior that's non standard, like socially unusual, or even unacceptable

Emily McKay 03:50

would be creepy, or nasty for that matter would be creepy, or pushy for that matter.

Scot McKay 03:53

Well, pushing this can be creepy, because most normal people know better than to be pushy. But I think creepiness doesn't necessarily have to be physically threatening, like, this guy's gonna rape me. It can just be really weird. Like, you don't know what to do with this person. Or they said something did something made some gesture that just doesn't make sense in normal social context.

Emily McKay 04:17

I don't know every time I thought of a guy who's creepy. I always felt unsafe.

Scot McKay 04:21

Well, I think it has that effect on you. But I don't think the person necessarily has to be violent to be creepy. No, not that you said that right? But still being unsafe are feeling awkward or weird or like you are going to be stuck with this person. I know at times on the dance floor and I happen to dance with the guy and all of a sudden he has become Velcro. I can't can't get him off of me. I didn't feel unsafe, but it was awkward and weird because it's like, you just want to be stuck to somebody like this

Emily McKay 04:28

Scot McKay 04:50

like the cat and Pepe Le Pew cartoons.

Emily McKay 04:53

Oh yeah, that's a good that's a good impression of that. Yes.

Scot McKay 04:56

Was Pepe Le Pew creepy enough that he's been canceled as have all Warner Brothers cartoons from that era basically.

Emily McKay 05:02

Yes, but you see with Pepe LePew you have the one thing that you don't have in real life is you know that Pepe had no bad intentions.

Scot McKay 05:10

Yeah, he's charming and creepy at the same time.

Emily McKay 05:13

But in real life, that would be creepy because you wouldn't know his intent.

Scot McKay 05:16

Well, a Pepe Le Pew cartoon is ironic humor on purpose. He loves the kitty cat. He loves romance, and he's trying to do the right thing. But it's just too much dude back off.

Emily McKay 05:29

Right? too desperate too pushy?

Scot McKay 05:31

Yes, absolutely. So aren't we've established that creepy behavior is non standard behavior. I would also say that if you have thinly veiled bad intentions for real, and you're trying to come off, as if your intentions are better, that's also creepy.

Emily McKay 05:51

Well, good example of that I was out a nightclub and this guy was insistent that I take a drink. And I kept refusing it because I wasn't drinking that night, I was sticking to water and I didn't know this guy. He was like, Here have a drink. He was thinking I'm going to be nice and give this woman a free drink. You know, just take the drink. And I wouldn't and that pushiness? That insistence that I take the drink was really awkward, weird and scary.

Scot McKay 06:18

Alright, well, you know, we can talk about classic examples of people being creepy. And it certainly would be fun to talk about the times people, for example, in my life, opened up a medicine vial in front of me and dumped all her kidney stones into her hand for me to look at after saying she gets kidney stones all the time. I mean, that is creepy behavior on a first date. That's something most people would think, Okay, maybe not. You mean that's not sexy. Your kidney stones are so sexy, honey. Give me that calcium, baby. Now, none of that's going to be normal. Okay. And if a guy just starts talking about something that just doesn't make any sense, or the aliens came to his home last night and abducted him, but at least he was back in time for the date tonight, you know, that would probably be really off putting Well, there's a probable there it would be off putting

E

Emily McKay 07:08

or that there's a restraining order on him?

Scot McKay 07:12

Yeah, who would announce that? I've had that happen. So I'm gonna announce that on the first day. I have a restraining order.

E

Emily McKay 07:17

And he hasn't hydro encephalitis? Yes, yes.

Scot McKay 07:21

Oh, wonderful things. Well, you know, in that vein, I think sometimes people feel like they have to disclose all the worst things about them almost as a first impression. Otherwise, they're not being honest. People do that on online dating profiles all the time. Okay, before we go any further, I'm missing one half of my ring finger on my left hand. If that doesn't bother you read on, it's like, why would that have to be the first thing the person had to express?

E

Emily McKay 07:48

I think they forgot, you need to have your best foot forward first. And then if this was to turn into a relationship or potential relationship, then you can start to reveal the things that would be important for them to know. Until then it's nobody's business.

Scot McKay 08:02

And indeed, it comes off a little bit creepy, because why would anybody do that? Most quote unquote, normal people are thinking, why would someone say all those bad things? Why would someone leave with something negative? Although, you know, creepiness is non standard behavior. A lot of people do that. It's like it's almost become standard to leave with something that's negative like that.

E

Emily McKay 08:24

I don't know. Maybe they're looking for approval that they're okay the way they are?

Scot McKay 08:28

Yeah, but it's still non standard to me in terms of well, functional human psychology that someone would start with something negative, whether it's on a first date on an online profile, or whatever. But I think we make a good point here, because sometimes what isn't creepy to us? What may seem normal to us, will come off that way to someone else. And that in and of itself is kind of scary. What if I think I'm being normal, and everybody else thinks I'm creepy? What do you do with that? No, right? Not to strike fear, and absolutely normal people's hearts. Were listening to this. But I mean, it's happened before?

Emily McKay 09:00

Well, absolutely. Well, let's talk about how we can be not creepy or things that would result in creepiness, for example, going on a date, you know, taking somebody to a quiet place, and you don't know each other yet, that can be a little creepy, just in and of itself. Well, yes. If you don't know each other very well, you kind of wonder if, remember, this is about safety and security for women always. Right. And I remember being invited to like guy's apartment. And you know, sometimes I felt safe enough to do so. But there were times where I didn't feel safe.

Scot McKay 09:30

Well, I think if it isn't announced ahead of time, and the guy hasn't made enough of an effort to put the woman at ease, that it's going to feel uneasy to the woman that he put her in that position.

Emily McKay 09:40

Yes. And then if he continues pushing the issue, then it really gets creepy.

Scot McKay 09:45

Right, exactly. Okay, so let's give a sample scenario. I told you that I'm going to take you out on this nice date. And you can expect either by default or perhaps even because I said so that other people are going to be around, I'll make you feel perfectly safe, et cetera. And then what happens is whenever you meet with her wherever that is, she feels like she's in a dark alley and nobody's around it and anything can happen. And then all of a sudden you turn into an octopus. Well, that's creepy. It's non standard, because it was unexpected.

Emily McKay 10:17

Well, yes. So anytime a guy sees that a woman's feeling uneasy, that's when it's time to back off and do something that she will feel safe and she'll warm up again.

Scot McKay 10:27

Yeah, I think so. As long as you're willing to acknowledge Hey, you know what, my bad this is a situation where I wasn't expecting this outcome. Let's go somewhere where you're gonna feel safer.

Emily McKay 10:37

Yes, right. Now on a lighter note, what about farts? And burps? Are they creepy? What? No.

Scot McKay 10:46

Where did that come from?

Emily McKay 10:47

I went in a different direction. Talking about weird and creepy, right?

Scot McKay 10:51

You know, it's creepy with that the fact that we're just over 10 minutes into this podcast, and you're already talking about burping and farting. I'm already creeped out a little bit. And I've known you for like 17 years.

Emily McKay 11:02

You know, I can do that. Sometimes.

Scot McKay 11:05

You're full of surprises after all these years. burping and farting, like in public in front of people is absolutely creepy. Well, I mean, you don't know anybody, especially 40. I think I've only been in public one time in my entire life. And it was at a Burger King restaurant. When this big old lady just lifted up her left cheek and the whole restaurant. I think that's only happened one time in my entire life. But yeah, bodily functions, burping, farting, spontaneous combustion. You know, things like that would be really creepy if they happened when you didn't know the person. But I mean, here at Casa McKay, we know each other quite a while and we function away at each other, for lack of a better way to put it. So what exactly is the context you're referring to here?

Emily McKay 11:51

Well, I'm talking about first time days, or the first time that you meet each other. And you know, something noise happens? It can be awkward.

Scot McKay 11:59

Well, I mean, are you intentionally going excuse me and ripping one off with maybe even without saying, Excuse me on the first date? Or is this something that just is going to be classified under the file of world's most embarrassing moment capitalized because it happened in the context of a first date. I mean, the ladder has to be forgivable, it would almost be creepy to unload on this person for making such a mistake. That would be the creepy person, the person who overreacted and basically threw a hissy fit over it, although I wouldn't blame them for not having a second date. But, you know, depends on how bad the wind smelled.

Emily McKay 12:34

Scot McKay 12:37

Well, show me the person whose farts don't stank, and I will show you someone who you should probably marry. That's marriage material right there.

Emily McKay 12:46

No, but I totally agree. I mean, those things are forgivable. But you know, you can't help but wonder that when you go on a date, and those accidents happen, and you didn't get the second day, you're wondering, Well, did I Creep them out? The answer is probably not. It had to be something else.

Scot McKay 13:00

Well, I've been out with women, and I've been around a greater number of women. Okay, the number of women I was actually out on a date with is the subset of the number of women I'm about to refer to, who were cute, sweet, adorable, maybe even sexy and just ripped off a belt right there in front of everybody thinking they were one of the guys. I mean, there's a certain female personality type that weirdly, perhaps, creepily is more able to get away with that socially than perhaps even a guy would. I mean, if you're a guy that would be really boring just to burp in front of people, but sometimes, really cute, sexy, women have been known to do that. And the guys think they're even a cooler girl because they did that.

Emily McKay 13:41

Oh, but inside, we're just going oh, my gosh, I can't believe I did that. That's just awful. really isn't?

Scot McKay 13:48

Well, I mean, if she's mortified by it, it probably was a mistake. I'm talking about women who will do it, you know, like a drunken sailor and think it's cool. One of the guys well, that's a unique personality. Yeah. Right. So it's either creepy or it's not depending on the person who can carry it. That's an interesting viewpoint. If you're super confident, if you're super consistent, then you can pull off being a little bit, dare I say, eccentric, you know, different than perhaps other people without being creepy about it. I mean, some of the greatest personalities you've ever known, weren't exactly like everybody else, but at least they seemed relatively psychologically normal, and were consistent in who they were.

Emily McKay 14:28

That is so true. What about releasing baggage on somebody?

Scot McKay 14:32

That's normal. I mean, that's normal first date behavior. You're gonna meet someone, you're gonna go to a restaurant and then you're gonna sit there and talk about all your exes, all your disasters, all the red flags, red flags, the worst moments ever, right?

Emily McKay 14:48

That will be a nightmare of a date. No, it

Scot McKay 14:50

is a nightmare of a date.

Emily McKay 14:51

What do you do when you encounter somebody like that? Well, you try to change the subject. You say, hey, you know what? We have plenty of time. This is the first date we don't even know each other. Let's relax, have fun, just to see if we like each other. Let's talk about positive things. And let's save all the talk about baggage etc. and bad experiences for some other time. Although, that would indicate there's going to be another time when perhaps you haven't made that decision yet.

Scot McKay 14:55

Emily McKay 15:10

Emily McKay 15:18

You're absolutely right. That's a great segue to possibly there's another date, this is going well, but it isn't going well. If you're talking about baggage, you're trying to steer it in the other direction.

Scot McKay 15:23

Emily McKay 15:27

Or you're trying to save or salvage this opportunity,

Scot McKay 15:31

because you're hopeful. Yeah, I mean, so many people talk about baggage on first dates, that it's not only forgivable, but if you have a little bit of vision, just a modicum of vision, you can look and see, okay, this is a person I'm hoping for the best with you. I think they're probably normal under all this as opposed to creepy. And if we get things going in a more positive direction, there's more likely to be a second date.

Emily McKay 15:55

Well, not only that, but when we're nervous, sometimes we tend to talk too much and just blab and say things we shouldn't say. And we just need someone to calm those nerves and help us realize it's okay.

Scot McKay 16:07

And the next thing you know, we've stumbled into the creepy neighborhood. Because we didn't shut up because we were nervous, kept walking, it'll end up in the bad street.

Emily McKay 16:12

Scot McKay 16:15

So let's talk about some situations where someone may come across as creepy, perhaps without intending. Or even if they were intending. It's easily corrected. It's easily put back on the right path. Let me throw out two examples very quickly. First of all, when a guy is Mr. Nice Guy, remember, we talked about kind of thinly veiled intentions, he is going out with a woman he's spending a lot of money on her. He's agreeing with everything she says. But really, he just wants to get in her pants. This is a huge number of men, that creeps women out, right?

 Emily McKay 16:52

That's because we can read right through that we know exactly what's going on. This is a transaction rather than a pleasant date.

 Scot McKay 16:59

Now why would that classify as creepy per se?

 Emily McKay 17:03

Well, you'd feel like, you know, he's trying to buy you know, like, you're a prostitute. He just wants you in bed for sex. And you know, take you a nice dinner and buy you nice gifts. He thinks that this is going to make that happen. And all she thinks is Oh, that's just creepy because he doesn't see me for who I am is a great person.

 Scot McKay 17:21

Well, what would be the less creepy way of going about it? If you're a guy listening to this show?

 Emily McKay 17:27

Well, caring about me and getting to know me as a human being first.

 Scot McKay 17:31

And ironically enough, that might lead to people being very horny, more quickly, why don't so many guys understand that it's like this creepy behaviors, the normal behavior out there?

 Emily McKay 17:42

Well, we've been trained in this society to think about ourselves and our needs. And we forget there's another human being that's with us.

 Scot McKay 17:51

Yeah, we're all about what we want. And we're so worried about our agenda that we forget the other person is actually human, not a robot. Who is going to make a decision based on purely objective garbage in garbage out input.

 Emily McKay 18:05

Well, in that case, a robot can do just fine.

 Scot McKay 18:09

Yeah, we're getting to that point where you can actually go buy a robot. He'll do whatever you want, no matter how creepy you are. Wouldn't that be creepy too? Well, yeah, guys with sex robots are definitely creepy. I'm not sure we'll ever get out of that phase of our societal perception. Matter of fact, I hope we don't. Okay, imagine what that would vote for society. If it was normal to have a robot who would just do your bidding. No matter how creepy you got, you know what would happen? We'd all get creepier because it was okay. That's creepy.

 Emily McKay 18:35

Well, that's because it's all about self and my needs and what my wants are, and not realizing in real life with real human beings. There's another person with thoughts and feelings and emotions and needs and wants. Well, you know, that's better. Although, try to tell everybody in the world literally nowadays that actually interacting with people face to face is better than interacting with them behind your smartphone. I mean, we've already kind of jumped the shark on that one.

 Scot McKay 18:47

 Emily McKay 19:04

I'd rather have the touch the feel the real sensation.

 Scot McKay 19:08

Yeah, I know exactly. I mean, especially in a dating romantic context. Although someone's creepy at you online that's not as bad as them filling you up offline.

 Emily McKay 19:20

All right, yeah, well online it's easy to hit the Escape button the block button whereas in real life hit next scape buttons a little bit challenging sometimes which is why we have a girlfriend's give us a call make sure that everything's going okay on the date so that if it's not we can you know, make an excuse to to end this soon

Scot McKay 19:38

or you give the help me rescue me face to your girlfriend at the bar

Emily McKay 19:41

right all right, can

Scot McKay 19:42

we get out of here you know, help me you know that one or most

Emily McKay 19:45

and another guy that hey, you know, can you ask me out to dance you know, can you like rescue me? I've had that happen?

Scot McKay 19:50

Yeah, I mean, that really catches us off guard as guys when a woman comes over and says I don't know you at all. But can you come rescue me? Weirdly, that's not creepy to us. Good men under Stan, what's going on there? Oh, good, because I've done that a few times. Now, speaking of creepy people, though, remember, I promised two examples. Okay. And I'm actually going to give two more. But the second one still relates to men more often. Let's say you're a macho guy, you come off as really masculine, you drive a diesel pickup truck, have a beard talk like this, you know, and you're scared of women. And you don't know what to say to them, and you're tongue tied, and you get all nervous, women are gonna see that visual persona, and then get the vibe of your personality. And they're gonna think this doesn't match up. And perhaps ironically, to the guy who was trying not to mess up, it's going to come off as creepy.

Emily McKay 20:42

Yes, we need consistency. Without it. It's like something's not right. It's like math. If one and one doesn't add up to two, something's wrong.

Scot McKay 20:50

Yeah. And then it becomes creepy. Because it's non standard. It doesn't make sense, therefore, it's creepy.

Emily McKay 20:55

Yeah we need everything to line and make sense. Because if it doesn't like you know what's Yeah, we need everything to line up and make sense. Because if it doesn't, like, you know, what's gonna, what's gonna jump out at us and scare us, right? So I mean, when it comes to men, we're better off if we like women, respect women, and are pretty upfront about how we're enjoying the date, how we're enjoying you as company and even when the timing is right, that we're attracted. And maybe we'd like to kiss you. Yeah, that's all a lot better than trying to hide from it. Because hiding from it feels like, we're not being genuine, that something is non standard. This isn't the flow of things, or the absolute kiss of death. This guy just doesn't get it. Which is creepy, which is weird, because we don't understand what's going on or why things aren't turning out the way we want. Sometimes we're waiting and we're waiting and that kiss isn't happening. And we're like, why? We don't understand. Oh, man, what a great point. It is really frustrating to us as guys, Emily that if we move too quickly, sexually, we're creepy. But if we don't move sexually at all soon enough, we're also creepy. Explain.

Scot McKay 21:02

Emily McKay 21:34

Scot McKay 21:45

Emily McKay 21:59

Well, you know when the time is right, go for it. But the problem is, you know, when guys are afraid that if they're too pushy, purposely trying to delay, and you keep doing it for too long. You're overthinking it.

Scot McKay 22:12

Yeah. But when is the right time? When is that one precise moment in time? Where's that window and time, maybe even if you don't want to get too precise and really pressure these guys? Where is that moment when I'm not creepy anymore. And I'm not about to become creepy by having sat on my hands too long.

Emily McKay 22:33

Well, if you're paying attention to her cues, and things are going great, you're getting along, you're both laughing and everything's going great. And you're looking forward to the next time that you get to see each other things are going well, that's the time to do it.

Scot McKay 22:46

Right. And then maybe you can take a little walk to somewhere romantic. And she's with you and you hold hands first, you offer your hand and she takes it, then you stop, square up, tilt your head, and the kiss happens,

Emily McKay 22:58

right? But if at any point, she gives you the cue that she pulls away, then you know, that's not the right time. But if things are going well and she's accepting it and she's, for that matter, she's touching you, that's another cue. Pay attention to what she's doing what she's saying. She'll let you know, with those little hints.

Scot McKay 23:16

Now, that was a wonderful segue to that third example I was going to offer because I was going to turn the tables and talk about when women are creepy to us.

Emily McKay 23:25

We are never creepy. Oh yes, you can be

Scot McKay 23:29

and I wonder how many guys are going to nod their heads raise their hand and go oh, yeah, I'm in total agreement when I utter what I'm about to say. If there's a woman, okay, and she seems reasonably attractive, like she wouldn't have a hard time getting men and she just turns up the heat turns up the volume throws herself at you and is saying you know you and I are destined to be soulmates and to be in love and she just dropped in your DMS you don't even met her yet. That is creepy. That is creepy. Any woman who comes on too strong too soon. She's gonna come across as creepy now here's where I'm gonna throw over more coal on this fire. A lot of guys think they want that. They'll even respond to these crazy women online who are just scamming them because they want the attention or they're starving for attention or it's been too long. And they try to believe this even though they know it's too good to be true. When in reality no woman in her right mind no non creepy sane woman right? Whatever do that because she knows is gonna get her nowhere but in trouble.

Emily McKay 24:37

Well, any woman who has self worth and who has self esteem would not do that. So if a woman's throwing herself at you and acting as if she's Velcro and she must tie you down and make you marry her. That's scary.

Scot McKay 24:51

Yeah, being tied down with Velcro is like a double whammy. Although some

 Emily McKay 24:54
guys might like being tied down with Velcro. Something like that. Yeah,

 Scot McKay 24:59
yeah, must be the David Letterman show when he put himself in a Velcro suit and threw himself against a wall of Velcro. Yeah, and he stuck. Yeah, that was epic. But not on a first date.

 Emily McKay 25:09
Oh, no, definitely not on a date period.

 Scot McKay 25:12
Yeah, so let's sum all this up. If you are actually taking an interest in the other person, if you're tapping the brakes a little bit, instead of running headlong into a relationship or trying to have sex too quickly, if you're not being pushy, if you're relaxing, if you're getting to know the other person, and you're establishing some sense of normalcy and not letting your nerves and you being all wadded up inside your head get to you in the moment, you're probably going to be less creepy also helps to be sane and not under the care of a psychiatrist while doing so,

 Emily McKay 25:46
yes. And being consistent. All of that all of that comes together.

 Scot McKay 25:49
Yeah, indeed. All that and more is there for you at either Scot and emily.com front slash podcast or mountaintop podcast.com. And remember, my name is Scott is with one T. So that was pretty good conversation. I think we summed up what creepy looks like without getting into too many applications, specific examples, because after all, Emily that would have been a little creepy of us.

 Emily McKay 27:16

I know, right? We have far too many stories, and everybody else does, too.

 Scot McKay 27:21

Yeah. Not only romantic ones, but like, people everywhere.

 Emily McKay 27:26

They kind of make life interesting.

 Scot McKay 27:27

Yeah, as long as they're not threatening. Right, right. So yeah, that's another thing. You don't have to be threatening to be creepy. You just have to be a little weird. Either way. You're not gonna get a second date, right? I'm like, No,

 Emily McKay 27:38

absolutely not.

 Scot McKay 27:39

Yeah, there's the mic drop for you right there. Until we talk to you again real soon. My name is Scot McKay

 Emily McKay 27:45

and I'm Emily McKay be good out there and have fun
